Introduction of Logbook

A logbook is a record-keeping document where students can track and document their progress, activities, and achievements throughout their research and study period. It also provides a valuable resource for supervisors and examiners to review the student's work and progress during the M.D program.

The Anatomy department of RMU require our MD students to maintain a logbook as part of their studies. The logbook serves as a comprehensive record of their academic journey, including coursework, presentations, experiments, research activities, literature reviews, seminars attended, conferences participated in, coursework completed, and other scholarly pursuits undertaken during the MD program. It can be a valuable tool for our MD Scholars to stay organized, documenting their journey, and improving their research skills. It provides a sense of accountability which can help them stay focused and motivated.

It should be signed regularly by the concerned teacher, lab assistant, co-supervisor and supervisor and are scored as part of internal assessment and examinations. Logbooks are preferably written by hands on daily basis, but E logbooks will also be available for our students.
